To the Members of the Board:

I am honored to write this recommendation letter for Mr. Sean Daniel D. Habel, a BS Biology student, supporting his application for the PCAFPD Scholarship. As a professor at the Trinity University of Asia under the Biology Department, I have been one of his observers since he started his undergraduate studies. I have witnessed him grow as an outstanding student and a remarkable individual.

Sean, specifically, became my student for a semester. Albeit limited time, he has consistently shown strong academic prowess and commitment to excellence and integrity. He became the top student in two biology major specialized subjects (Mycology and Systematics, both lecture and laboratory) that I am handling. This has also been observed in his other subjects as supported by my colleagues, and his other professors during our semestral grade deliberation.

In addition to his academic achievements, Sean is a dedicated member of the class, student organization, and the university. He has been involved in several academic, non-academic, and even volunteer activities wherein he showcases his communication, problem-solving, and enthusiastic leadership skills. One of his impressive qualities is that he has the capability, even if he is not the president of the class or organization, to make his colleagues follow his lead which would then allow them to efficiently accomplish tasks assigned to them. I also remember seeing him listening to his colleagues, and them asking for his suggestions. This kind of initiative speaks volumes about his qualities and commitment to contributing positively to himself and to his community.

Sean's dedication to learning and genuine passion for helping others despite financial distress have inspired his peers and the university. This student not only dreams of a successful future and society but is actively working hard to achieve them.

Mr. Habel is confident, academically smart, and humble as manifested in his credentials. I strongly support him in this application and believe that he upholds qualities that can leverage the scholarship with the same excellence or even greater as what he has shown to the Biology Department so far.

Thank you for considering this outstanding student for this opportunity!
