Recommendation

I have long known Princess before she became my student in her last senior year. She has been a trainee for Physics and Chemistry competitions since junior high school. Throughout high school, I was able to see her excel as a student, leader, and a person. She was an excellent student inside and outside of the classroom, and for this, it is my privilege to recommend her to be a PCAFPD scholar.

Princess has always been top of her class, she even ranked third overall when she graduated. She was a consistent "With High Honors" student and participated in different competitions for different subjects and areas. Two of her competitions were under my supervision (Quantum Clash and OlymPhysics) where her team bested schools inside and outside of NCR and was named champion. Despite the busy training schedule, she did not forget her responsibilities as a student and achieved great grades. In fact, she was awarded Excellence in Biology, Entrepreneurship, and Chemistry in her graduation, which are three of her major subjects.

Aside from performing in academics, her character also shined bright. She was the Department Awardee of her class because of her leadership skills and great personality. She was the president of my advisory class, and I was able to witness first-hand how she leads and what she sacrifices for the sake of the class. She was also a respected leader in her school. As the Vice President of the Supreme Secondary Learner Government (former SSGC), she was able to lead programs advocating for mental health, fight against abuse, and student welfare. She stood firm for her fellow students and persistently campaigned for their rights. She was given the Service Award for her excellence in leadership.

She was able to perform well in school despite not having the same privileges as anyone else. Her perseverance and desire to succeed pushed her to go beyond her limitations. She was seen, admired, and respected by the students and her teachers for how she tirelessly exerted effort to outperform herself each day. I am excited for her for her fruitful journey and how great she would be.
