Recommendation

It is with great pleasure and confidence that I recommend Angelica Brent Patubo for consideration for the PCAFPD Scholarship. I had the privilege of being Angelica's Mathematics teacher and class adviser during her junior high school years, which gave me the opportunity to observe her character, academic development, relationships with her classmates, and potential as a young leader.

During the years that I taught and advised her, Angelica stood out not only as a student who took her responsibilities seriously but also as a loving, sweet, caring, responsible, and dependable young person. She consistently showed genuine concern for her classmates and the people around her. Her kindness and willingness to help others made her unique among her peers. She was the kind of student whom teachers could trust and classmates could rely on.

As her Mathematics teacher, I saw her willingness to learn and improve herself. As her class adviser, I was able to see qualities beyond academic performance—particularly her sense of responsibility, compassion, perseverance, and ability to work well with others. She demonstrated maturity in carrying out responsibilities and approached her tasks with sincerity and dedication.

Angelica also exemplified true leadership. Her leadership was not defined merely by having a position or being in front of others. Rather, she led through her actions and the way she treated people. She was respectful, considerate, cooperative, and willing to extend a helping hand to her classmates. Her ability to care for others while fulfilling her own responsibilities made her an exemplary leader during her junior high school years.

One of the qualities I remember most about Angelica is her dependability. When responsibilities were entrusted to her, she could be counted upon to do her part. She understood the importance of cooperation and accountability and showed genuine concern for the welfare of those around her. These qualities earned her the respect and trust of her teachers and classmates.

I believe that Angelica's character, commitment to education, leadership potential, and concern for others make her a deserving candidate for the PCAFPD Scholarship. More importantly, I believe that she has the heart and determination to use the opportunities given to her not only for her own growth but also to contribute positively to her family and community.

As her former Mathematics teacher and junior high school adviser, I am truly pleased to support her application. It is gratifying to see a former student continue to pursue her dreams and strive toward a better future. I am confident that Angelica will approach her education with the same responsibility, perseverance, and caring spirit that she demonstrated during her school years.

I wholeheartedly recommend Angelica Brent Patubo for the PCAFPD Scholarship and hope that the committee will give her application favorable consideration. I am certain that this opportunity will help her further develop her potential and become an even greater contributor to her community.

Thank you for your time and consideration.
